I then reviewed with him in a little more detail the capabilities of over the horizon radar as I had been briefed both by the Director and Mr. Duckett. Mr. Bates was happy to have this information. He had not understood the basic nature of the information received from over the horizon radar and so this briefing was helpful. However, he is still most unhappy with Secretary McNamara's statements stating that certainly it would create the wrong impression and at the very least characterized them as "tricky."
